MILLIONS OF LOBSTERS. Fresh lobsters at 5 cents apiece is one the attractions that parts of north ero Canada, Newfoundland and Labrador offer to tourists and summer visitors says a Quebec letter in the Chicago Record. The New England Canning Company procures its lobsters so cheap in Newfoundland that it can afford to sell them at the price mentioned above.

Some interesting facts have recently history of the lobster in far northern latitudes, as a result of a study of the methods employed in catching and can-ning it. Newfoundland alone exports over 3 000,000 pounds of lobsters every season, valued at over $600,000. For-tunately for lovers of this delicacy, the governments of Canada and Newfound-land took warning a few years and he governments of Canada and Rewisdum-iand took warning a few years ago by the rapid depletion of the American lobster fisheries, and enac ed measures to maintain as far as possible the exist-ing supply in their own waters. The tempration of increased prices, owing to the failure of the American supply, was difficult to overcome, but the protection of the last few years is now producing a rich reward, and a live lobster of 11 inches in length, which 10 years ago could be sold for only 1 or 2 cents, will inches in length, which 10 years ago could be sold for only 1 or 2 cents, will bring to the fishermen, especially early in the year, 10 to 20 cents.

The official report of a few years ago that the catch of the lot ser fishery along the New England coast was scarcely sufficient to supply one-fif hof the demand of Boston alone, not only set Canada and Newfoundland to thinking, but impelled them to prompt action. Canada now hatches from 70,000,000 to 80,000,000 lobeters per annum. This, however, is but little compared with what Newfoundland has done. In no other country in the world is lobster hatching conducted on such a large scale as in that colony, or on so economical a plan. This is owing to the invaluable invention of floating incubators, which can be used in any suitable locality in the neigh borhood of a canning factory. They were originated by Mr. Neilson, a Norwegian fish culturist, who took charge of these operations for the government of the island a few years ago.

By their employment an average of By their employment an average of 450,000,000 lobsters per annum have been hatched and planted, so that in say in years the enormous number of 3,150,000,000 of lobeter ove have been brought to life. These life germs, preserved and artificially hatched, are all taken from female lobeters, which are aken to the various factories and would all perish in the boilers if not thus rescued and brought to life.
